position, and I would...I'd like to clarify that. But the amendment, particularly if you're following along, is on page 3, line 22, instead of the "manager of" the State Disbursement Unit, I put the "vendor operating" the State Disbursement Unit, "or his or her designee". I think that that...their presence, which will be the Treasurer, is important. It's critical for the flow of information and so there is some continued communication. The last amendment placed that in dire jeopardy, but that's what the body saw fit to do. We'll need to talk about that. But my amendment doesn't change what we just did. The second change is in the area on page 4. It eliminates, and this is language that it eliminates, "the affirmative vote of no less than seven commissioners". This is a group of ten. The committee amendment says that there has to be a supermajority, seven. I don't think that that's good policy. That allows a few to control the hiring of a consultant and so on. It also, language that I strike out, removes prior approval of the chairperson of the Exec Board. I have compassion for Senator Coordsen, and I don't know that the Exec Board necessarily wants to be involved in prior approval of all the different things that the commission may do, so I strike that out. By striking it, I assume that that means that there would just be a majority of people, but we may want to clarify that, who could vote to hire consultants, researchers, and aides, and other support staff to carry out the important function of the commission. And the last thing that I do that I think is most important is in the area of insufficient fund checks. It's a matter of life. It's a matter of reality. Most people, when they have a divorce, also have a severe turn in their financial picture. Two halves do not make a whole. You often split up bank accounts. You go to a new bank. When that occurs, that bank is less likely, because they've not had a history with you, to float you credit. You tend to get bad checks when that occurs, particularly if you are changing locations. You're in a new apartment. You're going to have to have a lot of funds available. I know that there is not supposed to be any insufficient fund checks. The reality is, there's going to be some insufficient fund checks. And the committee amendment basically talks about, if you have two insufficient fund checks within a period of six months, that you then, from then on, can be required to pay guaranteed funds, cash, or electronic funds transfers. In effect, I call that the death penalty. If you've
